What Happened to Redevelopment Land?

A Step-by-Step Guide to Finding Your City’s Remaining RDA Property
What was Redevelopment?

- From 1945 - 2012 the state of California allowed cities to purchase, acquire, and consolidate land assets for development through Redevelopment Agencies (RDA).
  - If your city had RDA, it can be found on this list.
- In 2011 these entities were dissolved, leaving many cities with extra land to dispose of, and complicated rules about how they could use the land.

- These property assets could serve an important purpose as sites for future affordable housing development.
RDA Property: Two Potential Sources

• In order to advocate effectively for the best use of this land, it is important to understand who owns former RDA properties, and what the current obligations the properties may have.

• The dissolution process divided real property assets once held by the RDA between two separate entities: Redevelopment Succession Agencies and Housing Successor Agencies.
Redevelopment Successor Agencies

• Were responsible for the majority of land assets once owned by the RDA.
  – These properties are documented in city specific Long Range Property Management Plans (LRPMP)

• The LRPMP includes an inventory of all former Redevelopment Agency-owned properties and a designation for how the properties will be utilized, sold, or retained.

• LRPMP are the documents to analyze to find out what real property assets existed outside of those acquired for housing purposes.
Redevelopment Successor Agencies

- LRPMP are available on the State of California Department of Finance website.
- Click on the city you are interested in to access a .pdf with all of the Successor Agency’s parcel information.
- All LRPMPs will include a table outlining the intended use of each parcel.
Example: El Cerrito LRPMP

This table is a portion of the City of El Cerrito’s LRPMP.

The circles indicate what the city proposes to do with the parcels.

Redevelopment Successor Agencies

• The LRPMP indicate the following about parcels:
  – PERMISSABLE USE
    • Land held by Successor Agencies should be marked “held for future development”
    • Parcels will be designated for governmental use or held for economic development
    • with a requirement to work out compensation agreements with entities owed tax revenues (e.g. counties and school districts).
  – PROPERTY TYPE/PERMISSABLE USE DETAIL
    • This indicates whether housing might be an appropriate or a planned use
    • Some of the parcels identified in the LRPMP may be suitable for housing development, and will include the size and zoning designation of these parcels

• Understanding LRPMPs can be confusing. Contacting Successor Agencies directly can help provide clarity.
Housing Successor Agencies

• Housing Successor Agencies received assets that were
  – Land designated for housing functions
  – Land purchased with funds from the Low and Moderate Income Housing Fund (LMIHF)

• These parcels are currently held for developments that would conform to LMIHF standards
  – In redevelopment project areas 15 percent of all housing units constructed affordable to low- and moderate-income persons, including at least 6 percent affordable to very-low-income households
  – A list of showing which properties RDAs transferred to Housing Successor

Housing Successor Agencies

• When reviewing the Housing Asset List from the State website look for tables labeled “real property.”

• Housing Successor Agencies are often a city’s housing or community development department
  – For an updated list of former RDA real property held by local housing
What to Track?

If your organization is interested in understanding the landscape of real property assets, begin by compiling a spreadsheet or database with the following information:

- Street address
- Parcel #
- Information about estimated value
- Size of parcel
- Zoning restrictions
- Agreements/plans (as notes): Was this intended for mixed use? TOD? What were the original plans?
- Designation for use in LRPMP: Held for development, to be sold, government use
How to Use This Information

• Find out who is in charge of your city’s Redevelopment Successor Agency and Housing Successor Agency.
  – Examples include city council staff, housing departments, or community development departments

• Begin identifying parcels that may still be available in the LRPMP.

• Work with local affordable housing advocates to determine if these parcels are suitable for affordable housing or another community development use that would benefit your city.
